Magazine is the name for an item or place within which ammunition or other explosive material is stored. It is taken originally from the Arabic word "makhāzin" (مخازن), meaning storehouses, via Italian and Middle French.. The term is also used for a place where large quantities of ammunition are stored for later distribution, or an ammunition dump.

A perverse dynamic takes hold when an open society squares off against a closed one. Strategist Edward Luttwak, in his 1974 book The Political Uses of Sea Power, notes that the differences between political systems can skew impressions of the naval balance. Open societies, including the United States, make a habit of beating themselves up in public over naval and military foibles.
